Text: A year's harvest washed away in floods.

The people living in our area are used to having a lot of rain. It's because they have so much rain that they have so much good crops every year. So when the Zio River flooded their fields they didn't think it was dangerous. Even when Togblékopé, the nearest village was flooded, they weren't worried. Then suddenly in august it rained without stopping for eight days. The mud houses were washed away and several people were drowned. More than ten thousand villagers escaped to other villages leaving everything behind them. Now that the flood has gone down the people are going back to their villages. But nothing is left. Many compounds have been destroyed. The government is giving them one meal a day. Many believe that the flood happened because the gods were angry, and the priests have made sacrifices so that such a flood will not happen again.

NB: flood= inundation/innondation
